Acknowledgments

Publication of this supplement issue of the American Journal of Preventive Medicine was supported by the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ) through contract #HHSA290201600006C. The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) is an independent, voluntary body. The U.S. Congress mandates that AHRQ support the operations of the USPSTF. The findings and conclusions in this document are those of the authors, who are responsible for its content, and do not necessarily represent the views of AHRQ. No statement in this report should be construed as an official position of AHRQ or the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

The guest editors and authors of this special issue would like to thank the current and former chairs and vice chairs of the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force for prioritizing and directing the advancement of the USPSTF methods, including Al Siu, Kirstin Bibbins-Domingo, David Grossman, Sue Curry, and Doug Owens; Arlene Bierman for her critical review of all articles and helpful comments; Joya Chowdhury and Quyen Ngo Metzger for coordinating and ensuring the support needed for developing this special issue; Meghan Woo, Tana Brummer, and Claire Hoffman for the writing support, coordination, and technical assistance provided to manuscript authors; and Robert Wallace and Jillian Morgan for overseeing the coordination and assembly of this special issue.

AJPM Associate Editor Robert B. Wallace, MD, served as acting Editor-in-Chief for this supplement issue.
